

Natural Singing Workshop

led by Cileke Angenent

September 27th

Cileke (1960 from the Netherlands) will give a singing workshop in St Bride's Hall

She holds concerts, workshops, and has a teaching practice where people come to her for singing lessons from all over the Netherlands. A few years ago, she gave a concert in Stourbridge Christian community with Joris Boon (cello) and sang with the audience afterwards. That was a success. Now she is coming for a whole day to Stroud.

Workshop: Cileke has explored many directions in singing throughout her journey. Now, she works with people in a way that allows her to convey the deeper meanings of singing that are part of a valuable singing-educational path, in a light-hearted manner (phenomena related to breath, articulation : consonants and vowels, phrasing, etc.)

We will sing together various songs and improvise: playing with rhythm, tone, sound and melody. Freely singing will be interspersed with singing exercises based on listening. This way, we will make our voices healthier and bring them into balance.

The workshop is accessible to everyone.

For beginners and also for those who have experience with singing, the workshop offers depth.

This singing provides real freedom.

It becomes evident time and again that the steps and experiences, as well as the insights into this way of singing, have significance for daily life and for the health and well-being of the participant.

It is recommended to schedule an individual lesson (or more).

Cileke has extensive experience working with singers and also with people who think they cannot sing:

"We listen together to your voice: there you can hear the strengths and also what is difficult. We will work on that with all confidence, at your level. We work in such a way that you can handle it yourself and take it further." .
